Success of the Carpet Clearance.

We had prepared for and expected a very large business in our Carpet Departments-we had planned to make this Spring Carpet Selling something to talk about. Detective Interferes With Plans of a Romantic Couple.

Prospective Bride and Groom of Tender Years On Their Way to Gretna Green.

Detective Hartigan, who does duty at the Baltimore and Ohio depot, interfered temporarily with a romance yesterday. It was due to his vigilance that Jesse Smith and Daisy Connolly were interrupted on their journey to a Maryland town, where they thought a magistrate would marry them without money and without price Smith was willing to promise the magistrate a fee, if necessary, and the young lady would not shirk any duty in the mat ter that might be imposed upon her. The couple reached here on the noon train from Laurel, the young man carrying a large bundle. When they reached the ticket office in the station Smith produced $2, with which he purchased tickets for a station on the railroad a short distance from Balon the railroad a short distance from Baltimore. He then had exactly one cent left. The detective thought there was something suspicious about the conduct of the young people, and he concluded he would make an investigation. To the officer Smith appeared to be not more than fifteen years old, although he claimed he was soon to celebrate his nineteenth birthday. The same was true of Miss Connolly. While seated in the depot the big bundle was opened, and the condition of the clothing in it convinced the officer that the contents in it convinced the condition of the clothing. in it convinced the officer that the contents had been packed in a hurry, and without any hesitation he reached the conclusion that Miss Connolly had made up her mind to take the young man's name.

The detective is a good reader of human nature, and was not mistaken in this instance, for when he addressed the young people they made no effort to conceal the purpose of their mission. Smith showed the tickets he had purchased for a station near Baltimore, and from this station they said they were going to Woodbury. fifteen said they were going to Woodbury, fifteen miles distant.

The Young Lady's Pluck. "How are you going to reach there with only a cent in your pocket?" the officer license?" was the next question. "We won't have to get a license in Maryland," the prospective bride answered, "and we will get a magistrate to marry us." She explained that if any money was necessary she and her Jesse could work she exclaimed, throwing her arms about the young man's neck. "Don't I love you, Jesse?" she added. On account of the youth of the young lady the officer had Inspector Boardman telegraph to her mother at Main and Avondale streets, Laurel, asking about her daughter. Mrs. Connolly came on the first train yesterday afternoon after receiving he message and met her daughter and her intended husband. She was inclined to be indignant at her daughter's conduct and had no idea of consenting to the marriage when the young man had not even asked her permission.

"We are goinfi to walk," was Miss Connolly's quick response.

Miss Dalsy was forced to ask forgiveness of her mother, but she had no idea of giving up her Jesse. Asked for advice, the officer suggested that the mother might consent to the marriage, as he thought it would be best for all parties.

"But I don't know the young man," said

The Mother Relents.

It was explained to the officer that Jesse Smith came to Laurel only a few months ago from Rhode Island, and found employment in the cotton mill. During his resilence in the Prince George's county town he met Miss Connolly, who has many friends in Laurel. Just when they had be-come engaged was not ascertained, but the fact remained that they did run away to cast their lots together.

Mrs. Connolly, after studying over the matter, finally gave her consent, and in the afternoon she returned home, leaving her daughter in charge of the matron at Lieut. Kelly's station. This morning she returned

Under the laws in the District the mar-riage of the couple could not take place to day, and the young people, accompanied by the mother, went to Baltimore on the noon train, intending to have the nuptial knot tied in that city. It is more than probable that Laurel will be the future home of the
